

Robert Louis Stevenson (1850-94)

Of the many famous sons and daughters of Edinburgh, Robert Louis Stevenson is among the best known. Most people have read Treasure Island and Kidnapped. What is less generally known, perhaps, is that Stevenson was a fine writer of short stories and essays, and a formidable journalist. He was also a lively letter writer. Stevenson was always a fine stylist, able to tell an exciting tale.

He was born in 1850 at 8 Howard Place, Inverleith, a short distance from the Royal Botanic Gardens. In 1853 the family moved across the way to 1 Inverleith Terrace. Though larger, the new house was damp and more exposed than the Stevenson's former home and medical advice suggested the family move to a more salubrious home. When Louis (as he was always called) was about seven the family moved up the hill to 17 Heriot Row.

Intended for lighthouse engineering, like his father, Robert rebelled. Even the law course at Edinburgh University was not to his taste. He made a few attempts to practise, and did have one client, but he regarded the completion of his studies as a fulfilment of a bargain with his father. Nevertheless he was very proud of a brass plate reading R L Stevenson Advocate which was placed at No. 17. Writing was his passion. Stevenson was a bohemian. He did not share his family's strong religious beliefs. Yet his first printed work was The Pentland Rising, set in the seventeenth century, which dealt with the Covenanters.

He fell in love with a married American woman, Fanny Osbourne. They were married in 1880, after she obtained a divorce. Shortly afterwards, Stevenson was diagnosed with tuberculosis. For the next few years the family travelled. Stevenson wrote voraciously but it was never easy. Excessive writing spells produced strong emotions and in turn, serious haemorrhages.

He travelled widely in the United States and the islands of the Pacific, finally settling in Samoa. Although in the Pacific, he wrote stories set mainly in Scotland. When he died suddenly, of a cerebral haemorrhage, he was only 44 years old. He was writing The Weir of Hermiston.

In Samoan: Tusi means 'to write'; Tala means 'stories' therefore; 'Tusitala' means 'Writer of Stories'.

Writing to Anne Jenkins on 25 May 1892 Stevenson explained: There are many judicial functions and TUSITALA (write - tale - really perhaps write - information - my native name) has to judge many causes and discriminate between different shades of falsehood...
